Postal receipts set a new record in Salem during this Christmas season. Postmaster A. E. Beardmore announced today. Cancellation of letters, likewise, was higher than ever before.

The December receipts, up to and including Saturday, totaled $10,236.28, whereas the figure for the corresponding Christmas period last year was $9,688.72. Last year was considered a "peak" year, too.

Quarter Total Boosted

The Christmas rush at the post-office boosted fourth quarter receipts to $28,233.81, while a year ago the revenue amounted to $25,622.81. The quarter takes in October, November and December to the 23rd.

While postoffice workers contend there were not quite as many packages this year as there were during the Christmas season last year, a total of 195,550 letters was registered on the cancelling machine, compared with the 1938 total of 176,400. This shows a gain of 19,150 letters over last year.

The first avalanche of Christmas cards came on Monday when 30,260 cancellations were recorded. Tuesday brought 50,010 and Wednesday, the "peak" day, 51,010. There was a drop on Thursday to 37,150 while Friday's cancellations totaled 20,370. On Saturday, only 6,750 letters were received.

1,000 Cards Undelivered

Today postoffice workers busied themselves checking approximately 1,000 Christmas greetings which could not be delivered, some because the addressee had moved away, others because of insufficient address and others due to lack of postage.

Notices will be sent to the intended receivers of the cards lacking sufficient postage so that they can be claimed if the postage due is paid. Postal rules prohibit forwarding the letters unless postage is assured.

Work Progressing
On Skating Project

Work continues to progress at the site of the West End skating pond. E. C. Sheen, Jr., president of the park commission, reported today.

A shelter house, or "lean-to," has been erected as well as two restrooms for the accommodation of the hundreds of skaters who are expected to take advantage of the pond as soon as the bowl is flooded.

However, work remains to be done in thoroughly sealing the pond before flooding. In case this work is delayed, Sheen explained that a temporary dam would be built in order that a small section of the pond could be used.

Herbert C. Hutcheson (But He Prefers "Hutch"), to Conclude 40 Years of Service In January;
Has Couple More Years To Go

By JACK BALLANTINE

Resting on the sill of a basement window, adjoining the north entrance to McKinley school building, is a time-worn old hand bell. You'll find it there at all times except when it is in the hands of Herbert C. Hutcheson, "grand old man" among the city's public school building custodians, who, to hundreds of former pupils of McKinley school, is just "Hutchie".

Four times each day during the nine-month school term "Hutchie" picks up the bell, steps outside the building and, with its still clear-ringing tone, summons students to their classrooms. He has been doing this for nearly 39 years.

"Hutchie" and the old bell are as much of a part of the McKinley building as its foundation. The bell is older in point of service, but not by many years.

Armistice Broke Tapper

"Hutchie" fondly handles the old bell and recalls the time he broke its original tapper the day the Armistice, ending the first World War, was signed in 1918. Overjoyed at the news, he grabbed the bell, gathered up all the school children he could find and went marching down the street, loudly acclaiming the happy event.

"Hutchie" recalls that the school principal was none too pleased at his taking the children with him without first gaining her permission, but relates that she overlooked the incident in view of the spirit which prompted his act.

He put a new tapper in the bell the next day, and it has served ever since.

The bell has been away from the building only once in "Hutchie's" memory. That was many years ago when it was stolen by some youngsters as a prank. After questioning several boys, "Hutchie" discovered who had the bell, and it was not long before it returned to its old place.

Bell Bought 49 Years Ago

The bell is as old as McKinley school. It was purchased near 49 years ago when the building was constructed.

"Hutchie" used to ring the bell eight times a day. He would walk up and down East State st. in front of the school ringing it in the old days when there were no playgrounds adjoining the building. Then he would ring a first and second bell to signal the start of school each morning and afternoon, a bell before recess twice each day and a bell at the close of school in the morning and afternoon.

The bell-ringing system was changed under Supt. Jesse S. Johnson and, after that, "Hutchie" was no longer required to walk up and down State st. to call children to classes.

"Hutchie" has been custodian at McKinley school since April 1, 1901. By the end of next month he will have completed 40 years as a janitor in Salem public schools. He served for a short time at Prospect school before going to McKinley.

Followed Cyrus Young

Only one other janitor has served McKinley school. He was Cyrus Young, who was employed as custodian of the building for 10 years before Hutcheson took over the duties. Young, a veteran saddle-maker who had made saddles for the Union army in the Civil war, quit his job at McKinley school to go to Pittsburgh.

The late Frank Probert, who up until his retirement several years ago was the oldest janitor in the point of service in the city's public school system, helped Hutcheson land his job.

A painter and paper hanger by trade, Hutcheson had done some work for Probert around public buildings.

Reports Confirmation of Darwin Theory of Influence
Of Sex On Evolution

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE,
Associated Press Science Editor.
COLUMBUS, Dec. 27.—In the love life of Florida chameleons one of the first confirmations of Darwin's theory of the influence of sex on evolution has been found.

This was reported today to the American Association for the Advancement of Science by Dr. G. K. Noble of the American Museum of Natural History, New York.

Noble said Darwin had two motors, natural selection and sexual selection. The first, better known as survival of the fittest, has long been accepted. But Dr. Noble said thousands of naturalists have studied sexual selection among animals without finding the confirmation.

These Florida chameleons, he said, are surprising. The males know each female personally, and know other males personally, too. They fight the other males.

Nation's Most Costly Baby
Going to Bed

And As Babies Go, This
U. S. Federal Budget
Is a Whopper

(By Associated Press)
WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—The most expensive baby in the United States—the federal budget—is about ready to be put to bed.

The budget is, of course, a huge book filled with facts and figures wherein the President tells Congress to the penny how much he thinks it's going to cost the people to run the government for another year.

It is called the baby because from time to time various people have looked at it askance and said publicly and privately for different reasons:

"That's your baby, not mine."
Putting it to bed is an old printer's expression which means it's going to press, and that's where the budget's going—to the government printing office.

As babies go, the budget is a whopper. Last year it bulged with 971 pages between its thin paper covers and weighed nearly five pounds.

It is by far the country's greatest consumer of the comma—the decade's greatest digester of the demical. Nobody knows how many of the government printing office's commas it swallows between the dollar marks and the countless ciphers.

It goes for decimals as an average baby goes for candy, rattling the poor printing presses hours into the night as they try to get the point. And as figures go—boy, does it have one?

Last year this baby's figure was—$8,995,000,000. That's the kind of baby talk that keeps a lot of papas up at night.

55 For CCC Camps
Twenty-Day Quota

LISBON, Dec. 27.—H. A. Moore, Columbiana county CCC selecting agent, has been notified by J. W. Davis, supervisor of Civilian Conservation Corps selection in Ohio, that 55 young men will be selected from this county during the Jan. 1-20 enrollment period, and sent to camps.

Accordingly, Moore announced that applications for enrollment are being accepted in his office at the court house from this date.

Davis stated that plans are well under way for the selection of a CCC enrollment of 3,758 young men during the January period, with each county being given a quota. He also announced that while it was necessary for young men to place their applications early, none will be sent to camp until after the holiday season.

The judging will continue today and tomorrow. Selection of the winning displays is expected to be made tomorrow night, John Hochadel, Junior C. of C. chairman, announced.

Today's snowfall was expected to lend added beauty to the outdoor lighting arrangements.

(By Associated Press)
COPENHAGEN, Dec. 27.—A picked battalion of Finnish ski troops today was reported driving through Russia about 115 miles north of Lake Ladoga and east of Leningrad in an attempt to cut Russia's vital Murmansk railroad.

Russian forces on the Arctic ocean front and other northern sectors receive most of their supplies over this railroad, which runs from 50 to 150 miles east of the border.

Fresh Soviet Forces Mass
At the same time, fresh Soviet legions under the command of Joseph Stalin's personal friends were reported by Finnish sources to be massing for new smashes against the Finns.

The Finns said on Monday that their troops had crossed the frontier into Russia near Leningrad.

From the Finnish-Norwegian border came reports that advancing Finnish troops in far northern Finland were collecting large quantities of war material abandoned by retreating Russians between Nautsi and Høyhenjarvi. Included were many Russian tanks stalled in the snow.

With the temperature still four below zero (Fahrenheit), the woods east of Komurvi, central Finland, were reported full of Russian deserters and wounded.

Await New Thrusts

In all sectors the Finns were said to be preparing for the new Russian thrust they expect will come in an attempt to regain some of the prestige lost in recent weeks.

Indications of the new thrust were seen in the reported gathering of new Russian troops.

Salem Man Injured
In Traffic Mishap

Wilbur L. Charlton, 31, of R. D. 5, Salem, suffered a concussion and was removed to City hospital following a traffic accident at the intersection of Route 165 and the Beaver and Green township road, three miles east of Greenford, at 5:20 p. m. yesterday.

Charlton's auto overturned after being struck by another car driven by Ernest Sanders, 57, of Columbiana. It was reported by the state highway patrol. Sanders received a bruised right knee.

No one was injured at 7:30 a. m. today when a car driven by Cornell Peterson, 23, of Jamestown, N. Y., collided with a B. & N. Transportation Co. truck of Columbiana on Route 7, one mile south of the Route 14 junction.

Peterson, whose car was damaged badly, told state patrolmen he fell asleep while driving.

SUCCESS SAGA
ENDS IN DEATH

Henry L. Doherty, 79,
Dies In Hospital At Philadelphia

(By Associated Press)
PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 27.—Death has ended the success saga of Henry L. Doherty—the poor boy who realized an American dream of business empire.

The 69-year-old head of the far-flung Cities Service company died last night of bronchial pneumonia. At his bedside in Temple University hospital were his widow, Mrs. Grace Doherty, and W. A. Jones, executive vice president of Cities Service.

Plagued for years by arthritis, Doherty had been undergoing one of periodic treatments for the condition. His physician, Dr. Charles Leonard Brown, said he was stricken with pneumonia two weeks ago.

Began in Columbus

Doherty's fortunes had their inception in Columbus, O., where he was born May 15, 1870—a newsboy at 10, gas company manager at 20, and so up the scale to millions at 40.

It was at 40 that life for Doherty began in the larger sense, for in 1910 he launched Cities Service. Under his guidance, it flourished into an enterprise of international dimensions. By 1929 its assets in utilities and oil holdings totaled more than a billion dollars.

When minority stockholders brought suit for an accounting of $100,000,000, the litigation was stemmed by Doherty's offer to settle for $125,000—an offer he penned from his hospital bed.

The utilities magnate reached out into other fields. The Miami Biltmore hotel, built at Coral Gables during the Florida boom at a cost of $10,000,000, was Doherty's chief property at the winter resort.

Little Old Lady In The Shoe

Mother Goose Rhyme Made Her Task Awful Tough;
"Charlie's" Work Makes It Seem Easy Stuff

COLUMBUS, Dec. 27.—The old lady who lived in a shoe should have known "Charlie" Sherwood. The Mother Goose character who had so many children she didn't know what to do would have considered her job a snap, by comparison.

"Charlie" had 550,000 persons, from childhood to old age, to look after this year. They included the crippled, the blind, the motherless, the sick and the indigent.

"Charlie" is state welfare director.

His department reported today that $57,000,000 was spent in 1939 on the welfare programs under his control. This figure did not include the local governments' contributions to poor relief.

The largest group in Welfare Director Sherwood's brood was the aged. The state paid out nearly $32,000,000 in benefits to 125,000 persons in this class. Approximately 15,000 were added to the aid for aged rolls during the year.

Ohio Covered;
Road Workers
Battle Drifts

A heavy snowstorm swept over much of Ohio today, disrupting traffic on many highways.

An inch and a half of snow was recorded here, with the temperature standing at 20 degrees above zero. The storm broke shortly after 7:30 a. m. when thermometers stood at 19 degrees.

The storm lessened at noon but the appearance of scattered flurries gave indications of more snow.

"The worst snow storm in two years," commented state highway department workers as they hurried to spread ashes on all hills and dangerous curves on the highways in Columbiana county.

H. S. Perry, assistant chief-maintenance engineer of the state highway department at Columbus, reported that "we've got 2,500 men working throughout the state and it's really a battle."

The Salem state highway patrol station reported district highways "hazardous."

Only the northern edge of the state escaped the storm, which brought deep snow and zero temperatures to the midwest.

Three-C Traffic Halted
Ohio highway department maintenance crews battled snowdrifts piled up by a 10 to 30-mile wind. Twelve trucks were stalled and traffic was halted completely at Clarksville, Clinton county, on the Three-C highway.

Snow was heaviest in the southern half of the state, Cincinnati having six inches and Washington Court House seven to eight inches. Cleveland had no snow, but flurries started falling at Akron at 7 a. m.

The temperature there dropped to 20 degrees. Many secondary roads in the southern portion of the state were impassable. Highway department snow plows kept main arteries clear.

Low temperatures and snow fall reported by other cities included: Dayton 28, three inches; Columbus, 23 and 12 inches; Huntington, W. Va., low 20's and two inches.

Searchers for the body of John Kozar, 28, who fell through ice on Nimisila reservoir south of Akron, resumed dragging operations today. Akron officials warned skaters to beware of thin ice.

Snowstorms, Zero Weather
Cover Old U.S. 'Dust Bowl'

(By Associated Press)
Snow storms and zero weather whirled eastward today leaving a white blanket nine to 18 inches deep over the old "dust bowl".

But as midwest and southwest shivered, two of winter's strongest forces reported "heat waves".

For the first time in the 66-year history of the Detroit weather bureau the temperature in Michigan failed to get below 20 above by Dec. 26—although it did dip to 18 in Detroit today.

A ski tournament in the Wasatch mountains of Utah was postponed because of lack of snow.

TWO SIDES OF THE SAME THING

Finland's war with Russia is to be backed up with "real military aid" from France, Premier Daladier tells the French chamber of deputies. Significance of a public announcement of French support for the Finns cannot be overestimated.

As a member of the League of Nations, France is opposed to what Russia is trying to do. As a separate government, though not at war with Russia, France intends to help the Finns. It seems likely Great Britain, in the same position, will announce its interest publicly too.

It means that Russia's adventure at Finland's expense has become a part of the new war on the seas and along the Rhine. At least one of the allies is ready to declare that it is fighting on two fronts. It will be remembered that neither Italy nor Germany while helping the Spanish insurgents ever declared openly that intervention was their policy, as Premier Daladier now has done in behalf of France.

Germany's role in this turn of events is indeterminate. Whether it considers Russia an ally in consequence of its non-aggression pact with the Soviets, or is content to take what security the pact affords and let Russia fight its own battles is on open question. In resisting Russian aggression at Finland's expense, however, it is evident the French and British would be resisting the same thing that caused them to go to war when Poland was invaded by Germany.

PEACE, WITH RESERVATIONS

Perhaps the most alarming idea set in motion by the war is that the last peace may be blamed for it. This is Germany's propaganda line and also the independent conclusion of many thoughtful persons who have pondered over the effects of the Treaty of Versailles.

John B. Kozak, former member of the Czechoslovak parliament and a member of Prague university faculty until it was closed after German occupation of the country, goes so far as to put fear of another bad peace into words in the course of his stay in the United States. Prof. Kozak is a visiting lecturer in philosophy at Oberlin college.

His gravest concern, he told an interviewer, is that the new war will end in another patched up peace that would serve no purpose except to set the stage for another war. It seems to follow that a patched-up peace is as bad as war itself. But what other kind of peace can there be after war except a patched-up peace? It's not this or that kind of bad peace treaty that makes war, but war that makes bad peace treaties.

The present war, as Prof. Kozak fears, will be no exception. That was determined the instant the belligerents squared off to start fighting. Their only chance to make a good peace was not to ruin their chances by going to war first, which was the thought behind the demand for announcement of the post-war settlements favored by Great Britain and France. The announcement never was made, of course, for the good reason that the allies will make the best settlement they can, just as they did the last time.

THREE LYNCHINGS IN 1939

Something about the ascent of civilization in the United States is revealed in the steady decrease of lynchings in the 57 years covered by Tuskegee Institute's department of records and research.

Until 1902, with one exception, the total never dropped below 100 and twice rose above 200. After 1902 it began to drop, until it reached a record low of eight in 1932. It rose again after that, but fell again to eight in 1937. In 1938 it fell to six, and this year reached an all-time low of only three—two in Florida, one in Mississippi.

That figure probably won't be improved on at any time in the near future. Lynching has gone slowly out of favor during the 20th century, but it cannot be made to disappear entirely while racial animosity exists in the south. In this connection, Tuskegee Institute reports that no less than 2 men, 20 negroes and five whites, were saved from lynching mobs during the year by officers of the law. Two of the three lynching victims were taken from the hands of the law.

WALLS

"Something there is about a wall," wrote Robert Frost, having nothing in mind except those stone fences that criss-cross the New England landscape and give neighbors something to fight about.

He wasn't dealing with monster walls like China's, or what the German's call the "westwall," now to be extended eastward from its southern terminus at Basle, Switzerland, to Lake Constance.

But there's material for a poet in military wall building—material for an epic work on the subject of futility. At enormous expense, Germany is building not the longest, but the strongest, wall in history to keep out the enemies it has made. Its policies are responsible for a French wall too—the Maginot line.

Perhaps, given time enough, the master minds of the reich might build a wall about their entire country, including all their newly gained possessions. It would be something to astonish the ages. It might even put the Chinese wall in second place as the world's most curious relic of a monstrous fallacy of defense.

TOY PISTOL IN SCIENCE

By STEPHEN J. McDONOUGH

Associated Press Science Writer

COLUMBUS, Dec. 27.—A method of producing "solid water" with a toy pistol was demonstrated today before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The solid water is not ice, Dr. B. J. Luyet of St. Louis university, St. Louis, Mo. declared, but a form which does not exist in nature. It has none of the crystalline structure or other features of the frozen water we skate on or use as ice cubes. It retains all the crystal pure transparent qualities of water yet is about as hard as steel.

Dr. Luyet uses an ingenious arrangement of two steel plungers, a child's toy pistol and a medicine dropper to make the glassy, or vitrified, water. The steel plungers are dipped in liquid air which has a temperature of 200 degrees below zero. One is held fast while the other is inserted in the toy pistol and shot against the first as water from the medicine dropper flows between.

The result is a small thin film of hard water. It is also possible to vitrify solutions of anti-freeze, glycerin, sugar, gelatin and other substances, thus giving scientists new clues to the arrangement of molecules in non-living and living substances.

Many plants and animals can be vitrified with liquid air and brought back from a state of suspended animation to function again. Dr. Luyet declared, raising a new point in the age-old question, "what is life?"

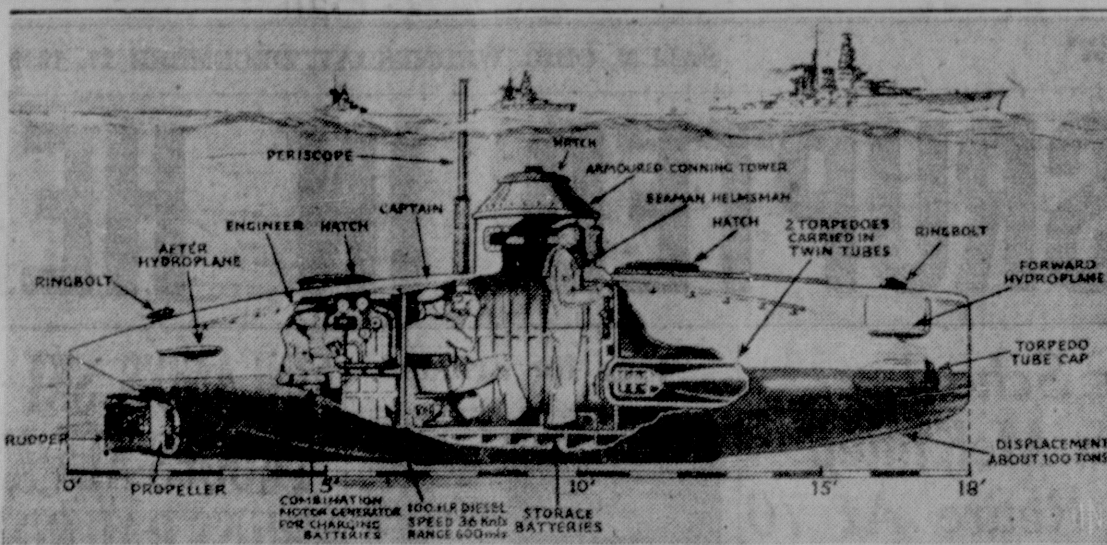

He has taken seeds and super-cooled them, then brought them back to normal to grow whole plants which showed no changes from a group of non-vitrified controls. He has glassified whole plants and restored them to normal. The spermatozoa of frogs have been put into the glassy state and when warmed back to normal have been as active as before.

In one of his most remarkable experiments St. Louis scientist converted pliable fibers of muscle into stiff, glassy rods. When brought back they responded to electrical stimulation by jerking in the same way that normal muscles react to nerve impulses.

He also has super-cooled shrimp eggs and incubated them into normal animals afterward. Various other forms of life, such as protozoa, bacteria, viruses, molds, fungi, mosses and some of the lower insects, all recovered from similar treatment.

In normal freezing, such as the formation of ordinary ice, large crystals form both inside and outside the living cells and disrupt the cell walls. However, if carried quickly to a temperature below 60 degrees below zero the water skips the crystallization process, and becomes glass.

Japan's Three-Man Vest Pocket Submarine

According to reports from Tokyo, the Japanese navy after years of experimentation has now put the oft-reported three-man submarine into mass production. Here, artist Kenneth M. Sibley gives his conception of the vest-pocket undersea boat. The craft measures eighteen feet overall.

Sulfapyradine Is Seen As Weapon Against Pneumonia

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D. AS IN former years, the greatest amount of research and the greatest amount of progress in the whole field of medicine in 1939 has been in infectious diseases, and the most hopeful work has been done this year in the treatment of pneumonia. This is due to the application of the drug, sulfapyradine.

Sulfapyradine is a dye. For many years it has been known that dyes of various kinds are selective in their action in that they will kill

In 1895. He was professor of pathology at the University of Greifswald, after which he associated himself with the Institute of Experimental Pathology of the I. G. Dye Works in Elberfeld.

Progress in other contagious diseases includes the following: Control of scarlet fever by active immunization with the toxine. This has been proved repeatedly by the immunization of pupil nurses before they go on duty in scarlet fever wards.

Severe epidemics of diphtheria have occurred in Europe, England and South America, of the malignant type. Where antitoxin was available, it was found that it controlled the malignant type as well as it did the ordinary type.

In whooping cough, the use of the pertussis vaccine has been very much more successful in the past two or three years. Up to 1931 it showed little improvement, but since then it has been very valuable.

The prevention of measles by human placental immune globulin is being studied.

No progress has been made in infantile paralysis.

"LOVE'S INTERLUDE" by -MAY- CHRISTIE

CHAPTER XV

"I'll mix you a Manhattan."

But before Tarry did so, he poured himself a double drink. "To get the chill out of my bones. This hellish climate!" He tossed off the contents of the glass. "That's the real stuff, Moira. You're a swell little hostess."

"Thanks. I did want to see you this evening so badly, Tarry. I've got steak, mushrooms, onions, strawberries as well, and some cream."

"Nice girl! You think of everything, don't you? Hands not hurting too badly, are they? A couple of Manhattans'll set you right."

She laughed again. That was her Tarry, brushing calamity aside as a child might.

He made four Manhattans, deftly—measuring the right amounts into the cocktail shaker—pouring the contents into four glasses at the exact moment they were properly chilled.

"I can always get a job as a bartender if the old firm boots me out, Moira! We shan't starve, shall we?" He grinned gaily at her over his glass's rim.

"They aren't going to let you out? They wouldn't—"

Always that swift anxiety over Tarry—his future—although her heart rose at the "we" which linked them together. Adorable pronoun!

"Not if I can scare up a few new clients. We'll discuss that later. We'll find ways and means."

For marriage? Marriage with Tarry? He and she working together, pooling their salaries, spending long, happy evenings in this little apartment?

The evening that Moira had longed for—and yet dreaded, for fear that Tarry somehow had changed—was starting beautifully. Of course he loved her. He wanted to be with her. Her woman's wit that had warred with her spirit of economy in making this bright setting of firelit, flowery beauty—a heartening plenitude of food and drink—had triumphed. From wet and cold outside, from mental exhaustion in the weary grind of Wall Street, he saw her as the one who could bring such comfort to the body and the spirit. She exulted in this giving. Tarry must see her as the eternal comforter that, through the ages, and despite all the vaunted independence of today's young women, was the role Nature—wise, malignant old Nature—had intended. So thought Moira as the sparks flew upward.

"Say, you do know how to make a fellow feel like a million dollars! Great little manager, aren't you? And a great little pal!"

"You know I love you to come here, Tarry. I want you to look on it—as a kind of a haven—"

"Heaven with a little angel in it, wings complete?" He grinned quizzically. "But don't be too good, darling. I'm only human. And you're a darned attractive girl."

Fear of failure and poverty was blotted out tonight in the little flat. She was his moral reinforcement. That was her métier. She rejoiced in it. And the sharp contrast of the disaster in the beauty parlor—her physical escape from what might have been, for her, irremediable disaster—heightened the poignancy of this moment, this blessed aloneness with her Tarry. God had spared her. It was predestined. They cooked the dinner together. It was a wonderful dinner.

Over the daffodils in the periwinkle blue jar—light from the fire and the two wall candles—the sole illumination—she smiled at Tarry. He would have been indeed obtuse had he not sensed that inner radiance.

She was a darling.

Practical-minded, too, as this selection of his favorite dinner bore out. She had passed through an experience that would have prostrated anyone less valiant. But back and pain could not down Moira. Essentially feminine as in his young egoism, he desired that Moira should be, she exhibited no feminine weakness, no bid for sympathy.

She was all out for his own comfort and enjoyment. That was a fact. And mighty clever in pushing his business interests, as well.

Through her charm and beauty—yes, and her aloofness to the other fellow, despite his money and his play for her—she'd got Randall Carlton going. Randall was definitely an asset, with his flutters on the market. Helped by Moira, he'd nurse Randall along.

Then Mrs. Rules—

But a certain shame-faced memory of his last rendezvous with the silly, love-starved widow made Tarry, at this moment, push Mrs. Rules to the back of his mind. He'd had a fairly good report of her from the hospital when he had called to inquire for her earlier this evening. She wasn't going to die. She'd live to let him handle lots more of her money. Warmed by the drinks, the good food, his fears evaporated.

Meantime, here before him in intoxicating privacy was the lovely and loving young Moira.

He cleared away the dinner dishes. She wouldn't let him wash them.

Tomorrow morning, her cleaning-woman would attend to all that.

"Come into a fortune, eh, Moira?"

He was her fortune. Love was her fortune. She longed to tell him so. But surely he must know it? Feel as she felt?

"Now you curl up on that divan." Masterfully, he piled cushions at her back, set a big one for himself beside her, drew a little painted table forward, saw that cigarettes and drinks were assembled.

His arm about her, her head on his shoulder, they talked. They left discussion of the accident out.

"Don't let's spoil a perfect evening, darling. I've so much misery at the office. And you weren't a bit to blame. It was the poor soul's inveterate vanity. What's she wanting to be forever dolled up for?"

It scolded heartless, though Moira was not so much shocked by his callousness as at her own swift feeling of relief. Mrs. Rules, qua woman, had been nothing to her Tarry but a means of holding down his job on Wall Street, and her jealousy had been groundless.

"Love me, Moira? Don't be so stingy. A kiss, please."

Their lips met. Clung.

Gone was all hurt, both physical and mental. There was no one in the world but just herself and Tarry. Everything that she had gone through faded. The very spheres seemed to swoop and sing.

"Do you love me?" The eternal question of the woman-in-love.

A violent affirmation. Extravagant. "Not the Scotch speaking, Tarry?" Laughter bubbled. She must maintain her equilibrium. But it was dizzying, this certainty of his feeling for her. Heavenly music!

"I'm mad about you, Moira. I want you. We were made for each other, Moira. You can't fight against it. She felt nothing but wild exhilaration—the breath seemed to leave her body—she closed her eyes—"

The breathless silence in the apartment was shattered by the loud ring of the telephone. Came another ring—insistent.

Then a muttered imprecation. The reluctant release of his arms. He sat up.

"Of all the infernal interfering inventions in this world!"

But he rose to answer it. Jerked the receiver from its hook. Gave a belligerent "Hello!" Then: "Who wants here?" gruffly. A pause. He swung around.

A curious look had come upon his face. Mixed feelings were depicted there. Annoyance—suspicion overlaid with a kind of eagerness as he said briefly: "Randall Carlton wants you."

Randall prided himself on the fact that he knew women through and through.

He was acquisitive about women. Next to money-making, and ranking perhaps a little higher in the scale of pleasure than good food and good drink, they were essential to the life of a gay bachelor.

But, not since his extreme youth, had he been stupid about love. Oh no! If it came to Randall Carlton's comfort, or the chance of a "big deal," or anything he considered were his rights from life, the woman of the moment—not to mention the long list of "reserves"—was quite subsidiary.

What if he had broken a few hearts? What if many women had paid? Not in the financial sense, naturally, for next to the potency of his good looks he sat vast store on money. Early he had equipped himself with money, the irresistible bait. What if he had hardened many women? Given them the taste of luxury only to discard them? Youth and innocence soon bored him. He liked wit, sophistication in his women. That they should be jaded gloriously—look like proud, expensive creatures so that he might maintain his reputation for being the very devil of a fellow—contribute to the "success picture" of himself that through the years he had consistently built up.

He was famous for his pent-house parties. They were the last word in epicurean affairs. He had the flair for social contacts, for mixing the right people. Many a big deal had been put through by entertaining hard-boiled Wall-streeters, Middle West manufacturers, shady big-time politicians in that pent-house—the real entertaining done by glamorous if unscrupulous ladies.

He had acquired quite a little army of allies of the genre feminine, in fact—and not all from the show-girl world. He had—and more important still—acquired psychology in dealing with these ladies, so that if they ever did show their claws, he knew how to deal with double-crossing, blackmail, threats of exposure, and the like—for wasn't self-preservation essential to increasing big business?

Essential, too, not to be bothered by a conscience. To use one's wits in a jam, instead of one's heart. His silky manner, his suave appearance often belied him, for he had inherited from his ancestors a love of fighting and of strategy. He was a chameleon who had not been born Randall Carlton, but something quite different.

Lately, to his annoyance, he had been feeling jaded. Nothing endured. Everything palled. He had chased money in all markets, and women in every state in the Union plus the gay capitals of Europe and even in the Orient—for Kipling was a wise old bird in hinting that a knowledge of far-flung remoteness helped one with the Anglo-Saxon.

To anyone so experienced, then, what was the charm of Moira Carewe?

Her untouchableness? Her lack of equivocation? Her complete independence of him and his money? Many's the time before tonight, Randall had surmounted all difficulties with women.

To get a woman was much easier than to get rid of her. Like limpets, they stuck. They clung tighter in proportion to one's distaste of them. They seldom knew when he was through.

Was it the spirituality in this Moira that attracted him? Something of the Mona Lisa in her deep dark eyes? He knew lots of better looking women, though she was quite lovely. Not her looks, then, deal? Or anything he considered were his rights from life, the woman of the moment—not to mention the long list of "reserves"—was quite subsidiary.

MOTORS BREAK LOSING STREAK; BEAT CARROLLS

Althouse Quintet Gains First Victory In Four Games

The Althouse Motors, defending champion of the city's Class A basketball league, broke into the win column for the first time of the 1939-40 season last night, nosing out the Carroll Club, 29 to 26, at the Memorial building.

The Motors had lost three straight league games before posting their first win. It was the Carroll Club's second defeat in four games.

The Carrolls battled on even terms with the Motors in the first half, but fell two points behind in the third quarter and three points back in the fourth quarter. The score at halftime was deadlocked at 12-12.

Sammy Drakulich and Paul Stratton collected 11 and eight points respectively to pace the Motors scoring. Clay Raynes led the Carroll Club with nine points.

Gain Second Win
Roberta Men's Shop hung up its second victory in the other Class A engagement, defeating Demings, 37 to 19, in a one-sided contest.

Roberta's stars led throughout the game after moving out in front in the first quarter. Bill Schaeffer was the big gun for the winners, hooping four field goals and three free throws for 11 points.

The Carroll Cadets remained unbeaten in one of two Class B games by spanking Rudabaugh's Sohloans, 30 to 18, for their third consecutive victory.

John Hanzlick tallied 10 points and Jimmy Rogers eight to lead the Cadets to their easy win. The Carroll five was out in front, 16 to 8, at halftime.

Staving off Demings' second-half rally, the Baptists gained a close, 18 to 16, victory in the other Class B game. The Pumpmakers trailed by six points at halftime, but rallied to tie the score at 12-12 in the third period and continued to press the Baptists in the fourth quarter.

RIVERTON, Kas.—The High school football team here boasts of one of the biggest players in the country. He is Earl Crane, a 16-year-old tackle who weighs 285 pounds.

DODGERS WANT HIM - By Jack Sords

BOWLING RESULTS

It was a bad night for top-ranking teams in two leagues at the Grate Recreation alleys last night.

The first-place Blue Ribbon Paints of the City Duckpin league dropped three games to the cellar, ranking Fratila's Cafe, marking the first time this season the Paints have lost more than two games in a single match.

The defeats, however, did nothing more than hurt the Paints' prestige for they remained far out in front in the league race despite the setbacks.

The Blue Ribbon team holds an 11-game lead over the second-place Local No. 42, N. B. O. P., which lost two out of three games last night. In another duckpin match, DeRienzo's Spaghetti Shoppe posted a pair of wins over Martin Tires to remain in third place.

The Owl Tenpin league the DuPont Paints, who had set the pace for the six-team circuit since the start of the season, dropped from top ranking for the first time as they fell before the Sanitary Enamelers in two of three games.

The two wins enabled the Enamelers to take over the leading position.

Other Owl league matches gave the Sanitary Old Timers three wins over the Trades Class and Martin Tires two victories over Grate Motors.

Two postponed matches in the National league were cleared away at the Masonic temple alleys as W. L. Strain Co. won two games from the Salem News and the Moose gained three wins on a forfeit from Kelley's Service.

In a postponed American league match, the Democrats won two out of three games from the Ohio Edison.

Architect Dies

TOLEDO, Dec. 27.—George Stratford Mills, 73, former vice president of the American Institute of Architects, died yesterday.

"HUTCH" NEARS END OF CAREER

Veteran McKinley School Janitor Will Retire When He's 70

school buildings in the late "nineties." When an assistant janitor was needed at Prospect school, Robert recommended Hutchison to Supt. W. I. Burris, who in turn recommended him to the board of education. The board approved his appointment to the job and "Hutchie" went to work at Prospect in February, 1899.

He remained there for one year as an assistant custodian, then was off for a year before becoming janitor at McKinley school.

Changes Take Place

Many changes have taken place since "Hutchie" first picked up a broom to sweep McKinley school's eight rooms, office and basement. Prominent among these are the installation of lighting equipment, improvement of heating and sanitary facilities, and providing playgrounds.

When "Hutchie" first went to work at McKinley, two oil lamps, one in the principal's office and one in the second-floor hallway, were the only lights in the building. School was not dismissed at times until 4 p. m. in those days and "Hutchie" was frequently required to sweep the rooms after dark with only a kerosene torch for lighting. The torch, which "Hutchie" still keeps in memory of those bygone days, was placed in front of a row of seats and the janitor would sweep up and down the aisle, doing the best job he could in the dim light.

The oil lamp era gave way to gas lamps which were followed quickly by the installation of electric lights. The gas lamps were used for only five or six years, "Hutchie" recalls. The veteran janitor shoveled more than his share of coal in his early days at McKinley before fans were installed to blow the heat through the building. In the old days, it was necessary for him to keep big fires in winter to provide heat for every room.

Hand-Made Drafts

Sometimes he was required to raise windows on the second floor to create a draft to draw heat up to the rooms.

Playgrounds were not provided for pupils, nor were recess periods given them twice each day, until many years after "Hutchie" became custodian of the McKinley building.

There were no fire escapes on the building in "Hutchie's" early years as a janitor, and, in thinking of this, the veteran custodian likes to recall an incident which happened during one of the fire drills.

Four boys who were assigned to open the front doors of the building for fire drill experienced difficulty several times in unfastening a bolt which would jam and delay the exit of children from the building.

"Hutchie" took the matter up with the superintendent of schools and was told to inform the boys that if the bolt ever stuck again during a fire drill they were to use the quickest means of opening the doors. "Hutchie" passed the information on to the boys.

Solving the Problem

The bolt stuck on the very next fire drill and the boys lost no time in taking action. The four of them stepped back about 10 feet from the doors, hunched their shoulders and plunged full force into the obstacle. The doors gave way and with a resounding crash both boys and doors fell to the sidewalk in front of the building.

The problem of the jammed bolt had been solved by the simplest and quickest means. New doors were placed on the front of the building shortly after.

"Hutchie," who was 68 last Sept. 1, has had plenty of time to observe children and he believes "kids" are the greatest things in the world. He ought to know. He has had five himself.

Youngsters have played tricks on him and he has been the target for "road biscuits" or "kisses" to the initiated many times, but he's come through all such experiences unchanged in his ideas about children.

The veteran custodian believes that children today are fonder of school than they used to be. "Children used to hate school," he says, "but now it seems to be a pleasure to them. They come early in the morning and many stay late in the afternoon. The teachers sometimes have to force them to go home."

Teaching System Improves

"Hutchie" thinks that a change in the teaching system, making the teacher more of a companion to the pupil rather than a strong-armed guard, and the addition of greater recreational facilities in the schools have helped to change children's attitude toward school.

"Hutchie" has seen many McKinley students come and go and has served as janitor of the building while three generations of several families attended classes there. Naturally, he can't remember the names of all the old pupils, but he does remember their faces. When someone calls, "Hi, Hutchie!" he can usually tell whether he or she ever attended McKinley school.

He has always been "Hutchie" to every kid who ever attended the school and always will be known by the same name. He dislikes being called Mr. Hutchison.

Poem For "Hutchie"

Typical of the attachment of teachers and students alike to "Hutchie" is an incident which occurred last Wednesday after school had been dismissed for the Christmas holidays. The teachers of the building called him to a room where they were all gathered and presented him a Christmas gift after reading the following poem:

"From five in the morning until five at night,
And often later than his light,
'Hutchie' is always at his station,
And he certainly needs a vacation."
For eight female teachers,
Can be worse than preachers,
For finding you things to do,
So to make recompense
And clear off offense,
We've this Christmas gift for you."

A life-long resident of Salem, Hutchison is the oldest janitor in point of service in the public school system. He has served under four superintendents, W. J. Burris, Jesse S. Johnson, John S. Alan and E. S. Kerr.

He was eligible for retirement three years ago when he became 65 years of age, but he plans to remain at McKinley until a state school law requires him to retire at the age of 70.

"Hutchie" lives alone in his home on South Fair st. His wife died 12 years ago.

Now He Knows

KANSAS CITY — Sam Wiley, a painter, always had wondered about varnish remover.

Starting a furnace fire, he used contents of a can he thought contained oil. Then he learned varnish remover contains explosive ingredients.

Wiley displaying numerous burns and cuts explained, sadly: "It's dynamite!"

Buckshot Alarm

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Mrs. Edward Kelly was awakened suddenly by sounds of shots.

Investigating, she found a fire in a closet. Firemen put it out. Investigating further, she found that shotgun shells in a coat, set off by the heat, had sounded the alarm—and probably saved the house.

TOPEKA, Kas. — Kansas, the state where cigars were once illegal, now collects an average of $130,000 a month taxes on them.

SUCCESS SAGA ENDS IN DEATH

Henry L. Doherty, 79, Dies in Hospital At Philadelphia

Aside from the arduous responsibilities of finance—three years ago he was listed as a director of 83 corporations and president of 87 of them—Doherty's engineering prowess won him fame in the realm of science.

The one-time chief engineer for a gas company he ultimately absorbed in his corporation network perfected a cooler system for preparing artificial gas, new distillation methods for petroleum and sundry other devices.

Doherty was known as a tenacious fighter. Once, to counteract an editorial attack by the Kansas City, Mo., star over gas rates, he bought an interest in the Kansas City Journal-Post.

He won commendation for his work in behalf of such causes as the Roosevelt birthday balls for the crippled children of the Warm Springs Foundation in Georgia and was frequently cited for his contributions to the advancement of science and human relations.
